Leuven, June 7, 2010 Quest for Growth announces it has invested €1 million into Anteryon, a Dutch private company. Anteryon is the world leader in wafer-based, miniature optical module production for mobile phone cameras and laser projection.

Quest for Growth joins an investment round led by Qualcomm Incorporated (Nasdaq: QCOM). BNP Paribas Private Equity, as existing shareholder of Anteryon, also participates in this strategic investment. Investment funds will be used for the breakthrough WaferOptics® optical module production technology and Anteryon's production facility expansion. Terms of the investment will not be disclosed.

Anteryon's unique, proven and patented WaferOptics technology revolutionizes the production of micro-optics for miniature camera and laser projection modules. Wafer-scale production enables extensive miniaturization and cost saving, while using the same wafer format as the CMOS image sensor industry allows for a full integration of sensor and optics production, which vastly simplifies the camera module supply chain. Anteryon is the recognized world leader in this domain, with a WaferOptics product portfolio ranging from VGA to 5 megapixel, and manufacturing facilities in Eindhoven and China that produce millions of WaferOptics lens stacks monthly at an extremely high yield for several top-tier mobile phone manufacturers around the globe.
